Apropos to the statement, while considering the adverse effects, the prohibition of the violent games, such as boxing as well as hand to hand fighting from television and world wide donning rivalries, is demanded by few masses. I am in consummate accord with the statement as such games prompt high danger of damage as well as put terrible effect on children.

Irrefutably, individuals have to experience the ill effects of the high dangers of medical issues and wounds when they present themselves to these terrible games. To illustrate a case in boxing, players are compelled to take amazing blows with the point of taking out their rivals and dominating the match which makes them think that its alot simpler to get harmed, incapacitated or dead after the match. Hence, having these violent games leads to harmful consequences.

Moreover, observing too much dangerous sport programmes influences children very badly as they can try to imitate those ferocious activities which may result in some incurable health hazards. Thus not allowing them to perform the normal tasks too.

In compendium, it can be asserted that it leads to various problems and harm not only individuals who perform it but also to the people who watch them, so they should be forbidden.
